

Anxiety on Aisle 7

● Characterizing Goal

Provide awareness of the struggles of performing everyday tasks with anxiety and the coping mechanisms available.

● Elevator Pitch

Anxiety on Aisle 7 is an empathy game that aims to show how someone with anxiety can find typical daily tasks such as going to the grocery store very difficult, and to demonstrate coping mechanisms through engaging mini-games.

● Goal/Objective

The goal of the game is for the player to make it through the anxiety-inducing ordeals that would occur during a trip to the grocery store through balancing progression with anxiety coping mechanism mini-games

Vision

World

The game takes place in a top-down view of a supermarket. Your mother tasks you with picking up groceries and medication from the pharmacy, before returning home. While to most the supermarket would visually not look very intimidating, to the main character the supermarket is very intimidating.

Mechanics

- > Moving around the map
- > Perform anxiety mini-games to progress towards completing grocery goals (muster courage to talk to pharmacist by spamming button, find correct cereal on shelf, count correct amount to give cashier, etc)
- > Perform coping mechanism mini-games to lower anxiety (deep breathing by timing inputs, typing game to journal thoughts, whack-a-mole to focus on other sensations besides the anxiety)

Systems

- > Timer so the longer it takes the more anxiety levels begin to rise
- > Anxiety meter that builds as you interact with anxiety events or with other random occurrences (loud dog barking, beggar asking for money, etc.)
- > Progress bar/system showing how many more tasks before you can go to cashier and leave
- > arrow showing where next tasks are in store
